Learn strategies for understanding and intervening with the most significant challenging behaviors in school settings

Intended for schools already implementing Tier 1 PBIS, this training is designed for schools that are ready to begin or ready to increase support for Tier 3 implementation efforts.

In particular, school personnel or school-based teams who currently work with more complex challenging behaviors are encouraged to attend.

This training series will develop skills for:

- ◆ Using practical Functional Behavior Assessment (FBA) to understand behavior
- ◆ Developing effective individualized behavior support plans aligned with FBA information
- ◆ Collecting data for individual student monitoring and decision-making
- ◆ Building systems of support to develop long-term capacity for managing significant behavioral difficulties
- ◆ Understanding complex behavioral contexts and planning wraparound supports (home, school, and community collaborations)

About the Presenter Dr. Flint Simonsen is an Associate Professor in the School of Education at Whitworth University. He earned his BS at Eastern Washington University, his MS at Northeastern University and his PhD at the University of Oregon. He has worked extensively with over 200 schools across the State of Washington in their efforts to implement School-wide Positive Behavior Support.
